

This collection is composed of two themes that complement each other.

The collection's first theme is inspired by ornithological prints from the 18th century, as well as herbaria created during the same period for the study of plants.

These nature illustrations and specimens served an educational and scientific purpose, being part of the field of natural history, which began developing in the 1700s. They contributed to botany and zoology, more specifically the study of birds.

Today, these historic images serve as a source of inspiration for our creations, still in connection with nature, by helping us understand it through these meticulous illustrations.

The second theme is inspired by artisanal jarapa weaving, as well as vintage patterns from the 1970s and 80s.

Artisanal weaving on a backstrap loom is an ancient skill. The earliest traces of such "hand weaving" date back to the third millennium before the common era, in Mesopotamia.

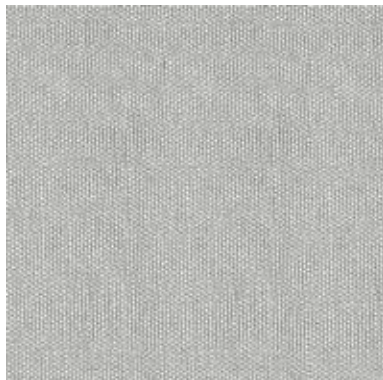

Jarapa is an age-old tradition of recycling, since its creators use old clothing or scraps of fabric cut into strips, which are tied together and rolled on spools to serve as weft for weaving.

The vintage patterns evoke the spirit of the 1970s, with simple, colourful, geometric motifs. The 70s was also a period where people again began to value craftsmanship and nature. It was a decade filled with dreams and creativity, with flashy, vibrant colours. It was also marked by increased awareness about the seriousness of environmental problems.

Our new high-quality, 100% recycled product, made in France, shares this same spirit and it opens up opportunities for developments better aligned with our environmental responsibility commitments.
